Greens & Grounds:

For the last few weeks, I was complaining about the cool weather and how the bermudagrass was in need of warmer soil temperatures to really start growing. Recently, we finally got some warm temperatures and the soil temps have begun to climb. That is good news for all the sod we have laid and for recovery of the areas affected by winter injury. The bermudagrass is rocking now and the struggle begins to keep up with the mowing and weedeating. The course is filling in nicely and rounding into form just in time for the annual Member-Member tournament.

For many years, Poa Annua or Annual Bluegrass has been a golf course weed that is terribly difficult to control, especially on Bentgrass greens. Bentgrass and Poa Annua are very similar physiologically and most herbicides or cultural practices that eradicate Poa Annua are also detrimental to Bentgrass. So when Poa Annua invariably invades, options are limited. Poa Annua is a prolific seed producer and that is one of the reasons it is so difficult to control. The plant produces seed heads in the spring. These seed heads stick up above the putting surface and cause disruption to ball roll. For years, we used plant growth regulators to suppress seed head production (with varying degrees of success) with hopes of keeping our surfaces smooth. When summer temperatures arrive, the seed head production ceases and the Poa Annua plant fades out and is out competed by the surrounding Bentgrass. About the only other option for golf courses to eliminate the Poa Annua from their Bentgrass greens was to resurface the greens. Obviously, that is very expensive and disruptive to play.

About 10 years ago, research began on a new herbicide from Korea called Poa Cure that claimed to eliminate Poa Annua from Bentgrass. Many of the top turf research schools in the country, including the University of Arkansas, had the product applied on test plots around the country at golf courses and research greens. The results were promising. And subsequent studies found that applying the product at very low rates could eliminate the Poa Annua from the green at a very gradual pace, so the Bentgrass could grow in to the void left by the dead Poa Annua. Ideally, the result would be a return to an all Bentgrass putting surface with little to no disruption to play.

Fast forward to April 2020, the EPA finally granted permission for golf courses to use the product in Arkansas. It was in the middle of the pandemic and before everyone started playing golf again. So we decided it would be a good time to try it on our greens to see if we could start transitioning back to a predominately Bentgrass turf stand on our greens. Some of our greens had up to 55-60% Poa Annua coverage last spring. The results were promising. We observed a good reduction of Poa Annua plants, but certainly not a complete eradication after only one application of the product. Some areas of the Bentgrass were discolored and did not seem to like the application, but recovered completely in a few weeks after the last application. Overall, I considered it a success but I knew it would take more applications to complete what we set out to do. So last fall, we applied the Poa Cure again on the greens. Again, we made strides and eliminated a great deal of the Poa Annua. This spring we applied the product one more time and it appears to have really done a number on the Poa Annua. We will likely need to apply one or two more applications this coming fall and maybe in the spring, but the reduction in Poa Annua has been staggering over the course of one calendar year. We expect any discolored areas to recover and spots where the Poa Annua has died to fill in over the next few weeks. That should result in really good putting surfaces moving forward.

We have hired our seasonal summer staff over the course of the last few weeks. We have some great young men working for us this summer. They still have some learning to do about the job, but they are everything you look for in a new employee. I feel really fortunate to have them on board and I am excited about what we will accomplish this summer.

As we really get into the heart of the golfing season, please remember to take the time to repair your ball marks on the greens, fill your divots in the fairways, and rake the sand after you have played out of the bunkers. It is a tremendous help to the golf course maintenance staff and, more importantly, it is the courteous thing to do for your fellow club members that play behind you. Thank you and I look forward to seeing you on the course.
